

AACD's Collective Community— MyAACD Network

“ This innovative communication facilitator helps AACD members find answers to their questions by gathering perspectives from colleagues facing the same challenges in their practices.

”

AACD has a new exclusive online global community; I invite you to join in and see what the buzz is all about. This new online forum is a powerful, easy-to-use tool to help you network, share clinical images and questions, ask for practice management advice, or just simply “connect.”

MyAACD Network is about extending the reach of valuable information and insights. This innovative communication facilitator helps AACD members find answers to their questions by gathering perspectives from colleagues facing the same challenges in their practices. This new community is all about having a voice and access to others' viewpoints in a way we have not had before, while offering the opportunity to share your own work and clinical advice with others.

Cosmetic dentistry is about broadening and accelerating the dissemination of empirical evidence needed to build and refine science-based techniques and combining them with artistry. AACD's new select network is a quick and convenient extension of that knowledge. If you have not yet tried MyAACD Network, I encourage you to do so. You can find it at <https://network.aacd.com/home>

In the meantime, I hope you enjoy the informative articles in this issue of the journal. Our authors provide descriptive examples of resolving patients' esthetic problems with well-thought-out treatment plans leading to high-quality outcomes. It takes knowledge, experience, and skill to correctly diagnose and plan a smooth workflow to achieve predictable healthy, long-lasting results. That is why networking with your colleagues can help provide solutions to everyday challenges. I hope you find the perspectives here and online useful. Enjoy being a part of AACD's collective community!

Edward Lowe, DMD, AAACD
Editor-in-Chief

